The comment from SACBO on the opening of the route active as of 1 September 2019.

British Airways has announced the opening of a route between Milan Bergamo Airport and London Gatwick which will be active as of 1 September 2019 and will operate every day except for Saturdays, served by a 177-seater Airbus 320. The sale of tickets for the new route, which began today, 21 March 2019, marks the official entry of British Airways into the Milan Bergamo Airport network, providing further opportunities to reach London, with Gatwick airport offering an additional range of international and intercontinental destinations.

The official announcement of the new flight for London Gatwick was commented on by Giacomo Cattaneo, the Director of Aviation for SACBO, the company managing Milan Bergamo Airport:

“We are delighted to welcome British Airways to Milan Bergamo Airport as of the beginning of September 2019. The presence of the most important UK airline is one of prestige and assigns an even more important role to our airport in the world of air transportation. The opening of the route to London Gatwick airport permits the creation of a connection of significant logistic importance with the vast and important area to the south of the capital, offering convenient flight opportunities to passengers headed for the United Kingdom, particularly those from the extensive section of the population to the east of Milan, and to the residents on the catchment area of the second most important British airport, which is only 45 km from London and served by excellent land connections. Another advantage is provided by the flight schedules, which have been studied to respond to the various requirements of the passengers”.
